Built in Dravidian style architecture, it is believed to be the richest Hindu temple in the world. The principal deity is enshrined in the eternal yogic sleep on the infinite serpent Adi Shesha. The history and fame of this temple is intertwined in mystery and rich antiquity. Several stories without any exactitude have originated from its huge collection of invaluable precious stones, gold, silver and a yet-to-be-opened vault.

Note: The temple follows a strict dress code for both men and women. Men must wear a Dhoti / Mundu with or without an Angavastram. Women must wear a Saree only. For those, dressed in a different attire, then a 'mundu' will have to be worn like a wrap-around skirt. Dhotis / Mundus are available for hire outside the temple premises. As per temple – customs, non-Hindu visitors are welcome as long as they believe in and abide by the Hindu faith, and are willing to adhere to the mandated dress code. Photography is banned inside the temple premises.
